

McLAUGHLIN COLLEGE

As part of our popular Lunch Talk Series McLaughlin College Proudly Presents:

The Case Study Method in Public Policy and Administration

Presented by:

James C. Simeon

Case studies and the case study method are the most prevalent pedagogical technique across all professional studies be it law, public and business administration, medicine, and others. The case study method is used in public policy and administration principally to develop, refine, and sharpen a student's analytical, assessment, and diagnostic skill sets and decision-making abilities to come to a correct judgement based on the relevant and factual evidence as applied to the most pertinent authorities and accepted principles and practice. This talk will focus and draw upon Professor Simeon's ongoing work for the second edition of his case book and instructor's manual, Case Studies in Public Management and Administration, <http://www.captus.com/>.

DR. JAMES C. SIMEON is the Head of McLaughlin College and an Associate Professor in the School of Public Policy and Administration. His areas of research interest include public international law and public policy and administration and he has published and presented widely in these disciplinary fields. Some of his edited book publications include: Critical Issues in International Refugee Law; The UNHCR and the Supervision of International Refugee Law; Forced Migration and the Advancement of International Protection; The Criminalization of Migration: Context and Consequences (edited with Idil Atak) and Terrorism and Asylum.

This presentation will be chaired and moderated by David Leyton-Brown, Professor Emeritus in the Department of Politics, York University, and former Master of McLaughlin and Calumet Colleges.
